What makes a Whole District Learning Environment unique? There are five conditions that exist in harmony in a Whole District Learning Environment: - the district's strategies are synergistic; - individuals in every role are continually learning; - all stakeholders work as collaborative partners; - the district is in service to all schools; and - resources are leveraged into whole district practices. Why become a Whole District Learning Environment? - to achieve strategic outcomes; - to pass along the practices of lifelong learning and service to future generations; - to fulfill the district's mission, values, vision, and strategy; - to enable all schools to apply well-formulated, best-available learning practices; and - to make targeted gains in the learning and development of the whole district's students. As the chair of the pioneering board of the Whole District Learning Environment, Elizabeth Crowe provided consistency in governance. Here in the following quote from a board meeting in 2006, she reflects brilliantly on the dynamic energy and evolving features of the district: "Our focus on everyone--child, teacher, administrator, and parent--as lifelong learners has turned our school communities into engaged, vibrant hubs of activity focused on student achievement. Our board is recognized as a leader in the province for its innovative teaching methods, its curriculum development teams, its integration of character education into a Catholic school system, and its business practices that redirect scarce dollars into the classroom." --York Catholic District School Board

For centuries, experts have argued that learning was about memorizing information: You're supposed to study facts, dates, and details; burn them into your memory; and then apply that knowledge at opportune times. But this approach to learning isn't nearly enough for the world that we live in today, and in Learn Better journalist and education researcher Ulrich Boser demonstrates that how we learn can matter just as much as what we learn. In this brilliantly researched book, Boser maps out the new science of learning, showing how simple techniques like comprehension check-ins and making material personally relatable can help people gain expertise in dramatically better ways. He covers six key steps to help you "learn how to learn," all illuminated with fascinating stories like how Jackson Pollock developed his unique painting style and why an ancient Japanese counting device allows kids to do math at superhuman speeds. Boser's witty, engaging writing makes this book feel like a guilty pleasure, not homework. Learn Better will revolutionize the way students and society alike approach learning and makes the case that being smart is not an innate ability--learning is a skill everyone can master. With Boser as your guide, you will be able to fully capitalize on your brain's remarkable ability to gain new skills and open up a whole new world of possibilities.
